Second Annual Dartmouth College Problem-Based Service Learning Institute

December 13-14, 2012
Dartmouth College

Hosted by:
Dartmouth Center for the Advancement of Learning, The Tucker Foundation and Campus Compact for New Hampshire

Facilitated by:

Tom Redden, Professor, Southern Vermont College
Kelly Young, Adjunct Woodbury Institute, Champlain College

Problem-based service-learning integrates community-based learning with real-life problem-solving in curriculum design and teaching. The Problem-Based approach emphasizes project design, community partner relations, building classroom community, building student capacity and ownership, project management, assessment of learning, and reflection and connection.

In addition to providing you with strategies, tools and ideas for designing meaningful experiences for your students, this Institute gives you time over the course of the two days to create a new course or to convert standard courses to a community-based learning course. This Institute is appropriate for all faculty and staff members and helps to improve student learning, teamwork, assessment of learning, teamwork, and reflection.
