Ed Laine is an Associate Professor of Geology, former Chair of Geology and directed Bowdoin College's Environmental Studies program. He is described as a pioneer in service-learning at Bowdoin and has engaged students in community based research since 1986. He credits the training he received through Maine Campus Compact in both problem-based service-learning (PBSL) and civic engagement as helping him become a passionate and effective advocate for joining the campus with the community. As a faculty consultant for the Northern New England Faculty Consulting Program specializing in PBSL and departmental civic engagement, he works with faculties on campuses throughout Maine and New Hampshire. Ed, with Barbara Rich of the University of Southern Maine, co-directs the MCC Problem Based Service-Learning Institute. Particular areas of expertise Ed can offer include: Introduction to service learning, Problem-Based Service-Learning, Service learning in the sciences, Service learning in the environmental sciences, Service learning, and writing , and The engaged department.
